

Dementia: Caring & Coping during the Pandemic

Roseville Alzheimer's & Dementia Community Action Team and Alzheimer's Speaks announce a new series of virtual presentations entitled Dementia: Caring & Coping during the Pandemic.

The purpose of this series is to highlight how current programs and services for people living with dementia and their care partners have changed due to COVID-19 and the creative ways that various organizations have come up with to provide services despite the challenges they face. These solutions will have a lasting effect on how providers reach out and continue to interact with care partners who cannot leave home or need support and assistance at times there are no classes or activities scheduled.

Lori La Bey will interview eight different organizations serving persons living with dementia and their care partners. You can watch or listen to these broadcasts on Alzheimer's Speaks. Individual links to each show will be posted on the Alzheimer's Speaks website for on-demand viewing or listening after the initial broadcast of each show. Information and links to broadcast recordings will also be available on the Roseville Alzheimer's & Dementia Community Action Team's Facebook page.

The presentations will be broadcast every Wednesday at 1:00pm CST starting on January 6. The series will kick off with an interview with Sara Barsel and Paula Rice Biever from the Roseville Alzheimer's & Dementia Community Action Team, who will talk about the upcoming series and other projects the action team is involved in.
